

There was once a man named Steele and he grew to be close to a mile high.
He loved to play with H.O. trains (real trains in our size.) He worked so hard lifting those locomotives that he had bruises all over his body. Mile Man (as they called him) got jobs with Penn Central, Pennsylvania RR, and Baltimore and Ohio. He was so strong that a circus invited him to their circus. But he refused. He started laying railroads near Pittsburgh. But Mile High saw the RR. cars had nothing to carry.
So he went home and started building a miniature steel mill. He built ten & different ones. He placed them all in Pittsburgh.

And that's why Pittsburgh is the biggest steel producer in the U.S.
