Buckeye J.V.S. — School away from School

Buckeye is fast becoming our second school. When juniors return from the summer break, they find many old friends missing at D.H.S. In fact, the school seems almost deserted at times. This year sixty-eight juniors joined seventy-eight seniors who were already at Buckeye to cut down on the crowd hanging around junior and senior halls. The missing ones were off to take a shortcut into the business world, for the most part. Of course, they still work on the same English and history requirements, but they spend much of their time in the nurseries, greenhouses, shops, stores, offices, restaurants, and other situations that give them some practical experience before facing the task of earning a living. Still some of the missing can be found at pep rallies, in the band, on the teams, and in the clubs. They are still a vital part of D.H.S.

Some representative pictures follow. At right, Russ Bordner tries out a tractor he repaired in Farm Mechanics. Below, Carol Stephan practices dental assisting skills on a New Phila patient. On the opposite page at the top, Brian Robinson get some serious occupational advice. Finally, at bottom Brenda Ankney prepares a "birthday chair," one of the traditions in Child Care.

— The Inside Story of BJVS —

Above, Phil Alexander: "My childhood dream has finally come true. I get to ride the BIG TRACTOR every day."

Below, Greg Marsh and Terry Young: "Some day we're going to weld the Eiffel Tower back together."

At right, Cathy Swihart finds Child Care Class good training for her life as mother of twenty-four children (in a classroom, at least!).

Below, Lori Ickes and Mark Harmon butcher up their job. And finally, even BJVS has its chorus line.

Occupations: Around the Town and Country

Many professional doors open to the students of BJVS. Cosmetology, secretarial work, auto body repair, graphic arts — the list could go on and on. But in addition to these city jobs, the "Jointer" can, if he wants, head for the peaceful countryside to work in agriculture, horticulture, natural resources and their many related fields.

At right: Randy Pershing welds. Below: Bev Rothacher aims at a Nine-to-Five job. At bottom: Dan Ray and Tonda Bloom have finally figured out that Ford doors fit Ford cars. Now if they can just make it hang on!
