

DHS Comes Alive With the CLASS OF '85

As summed up by the DHS seniors, they figured their senior year would be all fun and no work. But all hopes of no work were shattered by the first day back, so it ended up some work, but mostly play. While the year lasted, they shared their friendship, weekends, and school work, and tried to deny the ending would be coming soon. Then they would have to start finding the answer to a future career and eventually leaving their friends, family, and memories behind, as they discovered the "real world."

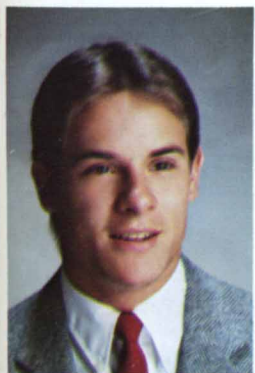

Jon Kellicker, Ryan Armstrong, and Mark Birtcher show us their plans for the future?

On the first day of school the seniors get together for the traditional group picture.

“What’s Next?”

In 1985 the senior class was asked, “What’s next?” The majority of the seniors said they were heading off to college or looking for a job. But due to the high intellectual level of the Class of 85, we came across some interesting comments. Here they are:

Doug Carpenter: “Tour the U.S. to see Z.Z. Top!”

Jeff Mason: “I DON’T KNOW!”

John Granato: “Live the life of a monk in the hills of Upper Mongolia.”

Mark Kandel: “To be all I can be!”

Jeff Fickes: “To be the kid your parents warned you about!”

Cheryl Torgler: “I WANNA ROCK!”

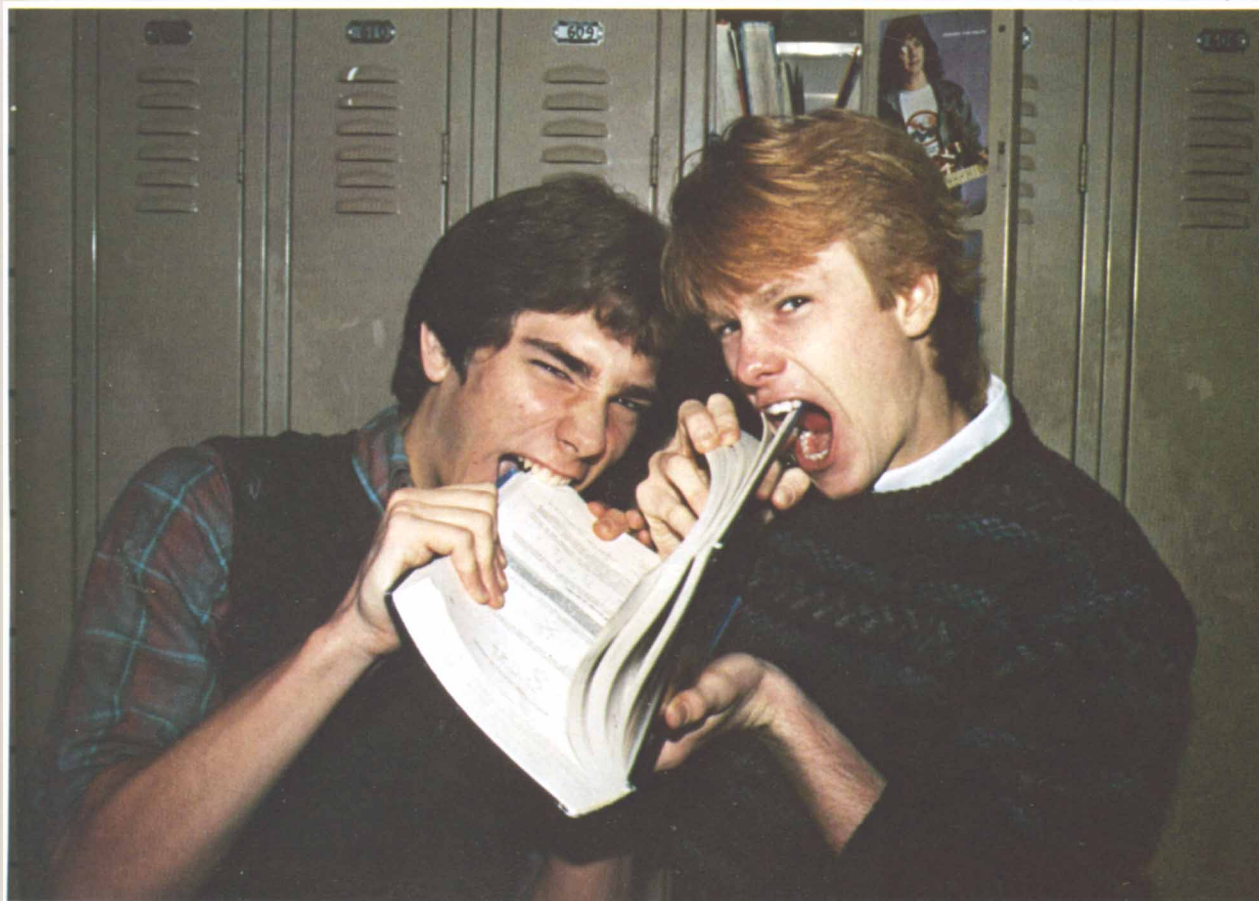

Laura Hastedt: “Go to college in search of a rich husband!”

Shannon Arnett: “Leisure, this year has been hard enough!”

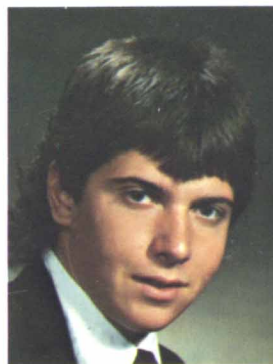

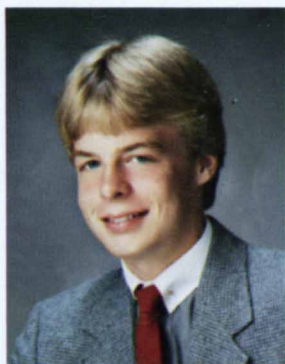

Chris Miller & Wendy Mills: “To Conquer High Street!”

Phil Albrect: “Hang out and eat green M&M’s!”

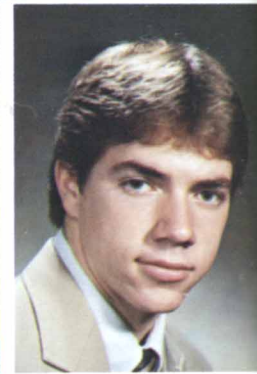

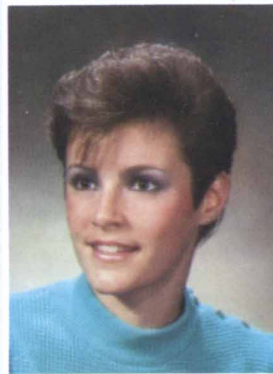

Courtney Miller & Scott Peters: “After this physics book, we’re off to Brad’s government books!”

Leisure Is Great

Senior life wasn't all work. They had their fair-share of play, too. Lourie Schar-tiger likes to eat and think of "Bill" when she's not in school. Weekends were usually spent at the games where the seniors cheered on the team for the last time.

Victory and get-together parties were another favorite past-time for the seniors. These were usually celebrated once a month at a senior's house. One recent fun party was held at Sam Davis' home. Even these could be a bit sad though because next year 'where will we be?'

Some people slept rather than went out because between school and jobs, they didn't have much time for anything else. A few actually read and had hobbies. And so we can see that seniors had a lot of leisure activities to fill their days.

Dave Burtcher and Lourie Schar-tiger make a friendly "twosome" at a weekend get-together.

Laura Hastedt and Melanie Davis ring in the New Year together.

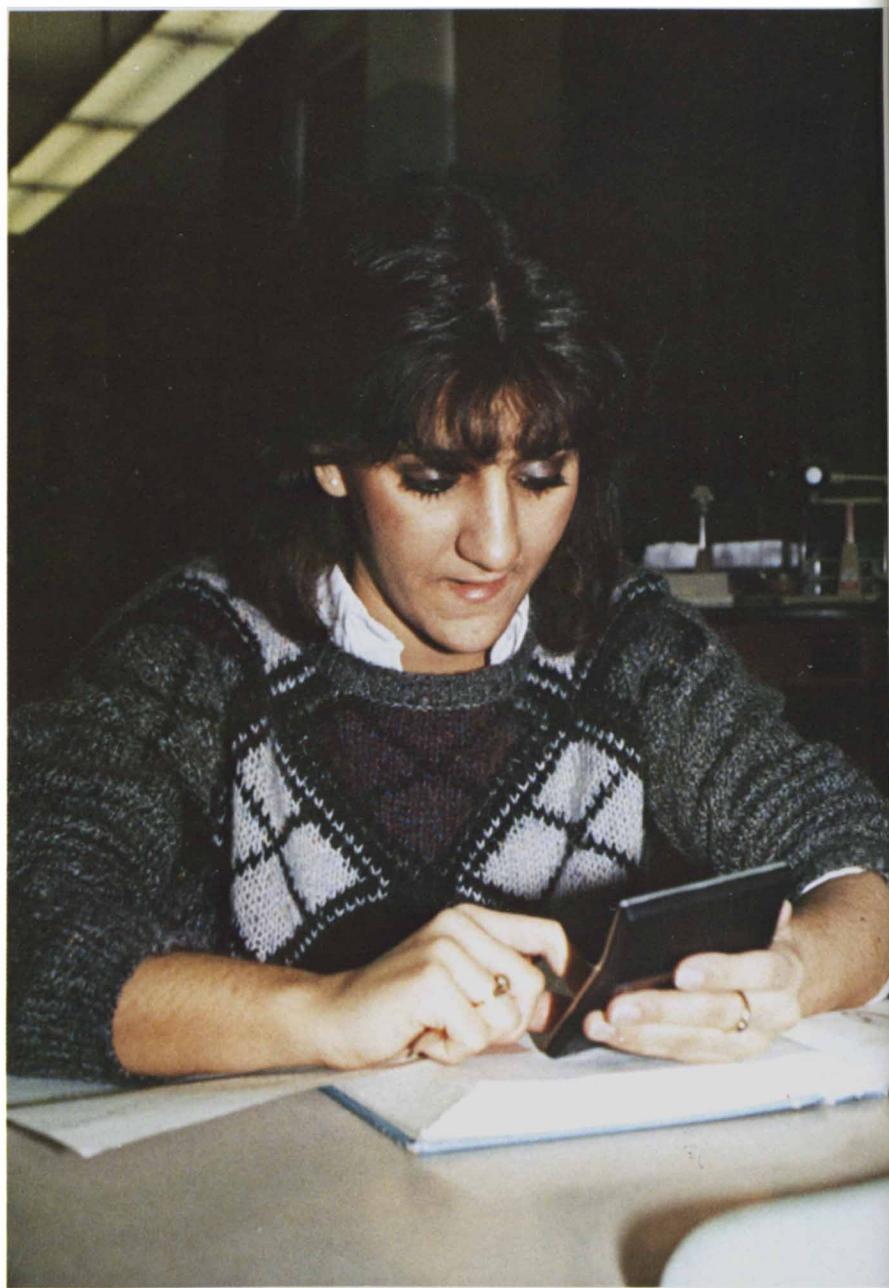

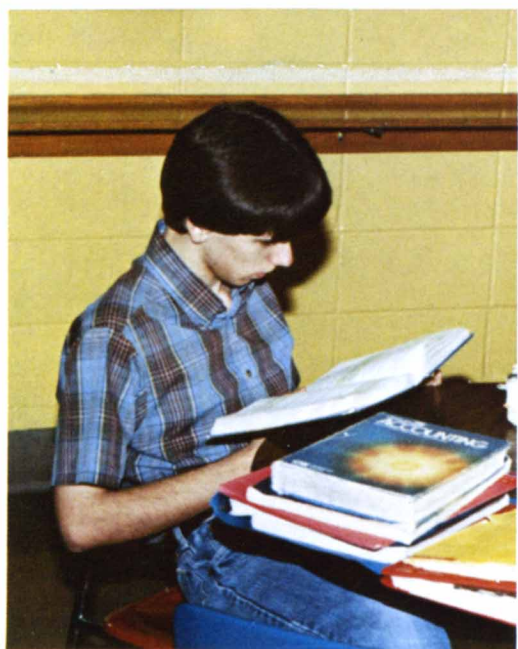

Brian Fox helps himself at a party held at a friend's home.

Chris Wagner, Stan Tate, Trent Leyda, and Bryan Miller celebrate their New Year's Eve at Sam Davis' party.

Renee Milyiori punches the equation for "PARTY" into her calculator.

Here you can see Dover's own Brian Cull readying himself to ace another difficult test.

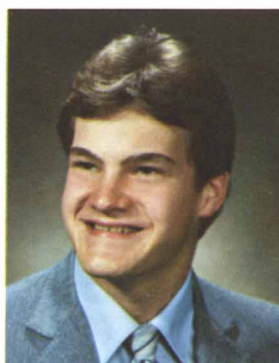

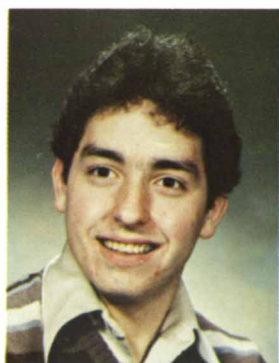

Dream High

In 1985, the seniors had high expectations for the future. No matter what they were planning on doing, they were planning to do it well. Some would be doctors, some lawyers, and others, well, I didn't know. "Go to college," is what most people had said. That sounded like a good, safe activity for seniors. Many seniors had dreams for what they wanted to do with their lives. Terry Tornabene wanted to play the guitar and sing professionally. Dave Burtscher wanted to work at "La Cantina", a small restaurant, on the outskirts of town.

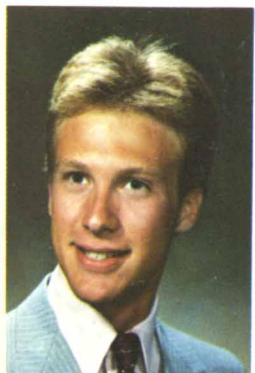

After they had become successful at what they had chosen to do for a living, some had wishes that were far-fetched. Bob Gerber said, "I want to do a 360' dunk over Ralph Sampson in an N.B.A. championship game." Julie Christy wanted to own Saks Fifth Avenue. So you can see that D.H.S. Seniors had their work cut out for them.

Take a good look, because this is a rarity to see Jon Kellicker and Dave Burtscher actually studying.

Friends Mean A lot

Life as a senior, at times, could be lots of fun. We mostly enjoyed spending valuable class time in our long awaited "Senior Hall" pretending to be hardly working on government and/or economics. Mostly we ended up working on friendly gossip and discussions about our weekend activities. This seemed to be a proven fact after we received some of our test scores! Through it all, we each had to realize four major things:

- 1) We finally made it to the top.
- 2) The battle against "Senioritice" is more than just a battle!
- 3) Being with close friends is alot of fun.
- 4) All good things, of course, must come to an end.

No, John Fox, Dan Dearth, Dave Brutter, Chris Wagner, Julie Crowell, Andrea Morton, and Chris Haney aren't working on economics, but what Mowrey doesn't know won't hurt.

Some of our photogenic seniors pose for a memorable shot, including Wendy Mills, Laura Hastedt, Bob Gerber, and Dave Reynolds.

Hard at Work

Besides having fun at parties, our seniors this year showed us their serious side. They proved they could work hard, struggling through math with Mr. Andreas and government with Mr. Swinderman! Some tried to work hard because they were getting ready to go to college. Others worked hard because they wanted to be sure they graduated. The seniors at Buckeye also tried hard to learn the skills they would need in the future.

Our seniors were quite often found studying and cramming for tests, especially when the end of the six weeks was closing in.

All in all, our seniors were pretty good examples for the underclassmen. They really showed everyone that being a senior wasn't all fun.

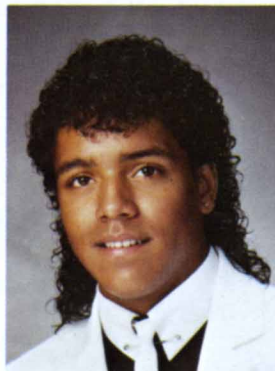

Many seniors, like Ron Bordner, actually used their study halls to do their homework.

Mild & Wild

During a typical week at Dover High School, activities could be classified as mild and wild. Students seemed to be mild during the week, while they quietly studied in study halls, listened to lectures in classes, and concentrated hard on their tests. But on the weekends, the students changed into wild, with such things as cheering at games, going to dances, parties, movies, and stopping at Taco Bell, Burger King, and pizza places with their friends to talk about their week in school.

Mild and wild could describe the entire school year, as to what students did with their school, and private, lives.
